

Testing Results

I used a couple of different email clients like Gmail, apple mail, and outlook. The Apple mail was looked at through my iPad and I used both the Gmail app and the website. For Outlook I just used Outlook installed on my pc. From what I could tell, most things worked on each client, however, they each were missing the same things. Gmail and Outlook were missing the animation that I added to the logo, heading, and hero image, but Apple mail kept them. The centering for the buttons was not how it looked like while I was building my email campaign on both Gmail and Outlook, but Apple mail kept the centering. I looked it up on one of the resources that you told us to use, and I saw that the code I used (justify-content: center) was not supported by these clients. The last thing that did not work for these clients was the slideshow type thing that has three slides with content on them. On all three clients, this was stripped away and the only thing that was kept was the title of each slide for some reason that I cannot figure out. Outlook also was the only client that stripped away the border from the titles. Also, the titles are supposed to be clickable to cycle through each slide but only Apple mail kept this feature, although they do not do anything because the slides are gone. Also, the shadow and the animation of the button popping out were also removed on the Gmail clients as well as Outlook and the Gmail app client made my buttons look bigger than it did on the other clients. Apple mail was the only client that kept it. All three clients also removed how the links would turn red when you hover over them. To summarize, Apple mail was the closet client to have all of the features that my website has for my email campaign
